

Notice. Try. Make your case.

For the video game creators you are becoming.

A small, specific observation is enough to begin. You can point, speak, type or work with a partner. There is no score or submission for this practice.

Open the interactive student guide

What happened? What might it mean?

Observation: The character lands one-quarter second after the beat. You can point to the timing.

Interpretation: The character seems hesitant. This is a reading to discuss, not a fact proved by the delay.

Try it

1. Predict how the two versions might feel.
2. Choose on-beat, then delayed.
3. Step through one-quarter second at a time.
4. Name one visible event before interpreting it.

Try the rhythm experiment

Sound is optional. The visible beat markers carry the same timing information. Play and Stop keep you in control.

Another reading is welcome

The same delay might feel hesitant, playful, awkward or intentional in a different context. What additional evidence would help you decide?

Name it when it becomes useful.

Tone

The overall attitude or feeling an experience conveys through its choices. Point to a choice before naming the tone.

Exposition

Information that helps us understand a world, situation or character. Ask what we are being told or shown, and how.

Observation / practice helper

A description someone else can inspect: a cut, a gesture, a sound or a timing change.

Interpretation / practice helper

A possible meaning or effect you connect to that evidence.

Thesis / practice helper

A specific argument supported by examples, open to challenge and revision.

Sync point / practice helper

A moment where an audible event and a visible action align.

One world. Two media.

The assignment is separate from this optional practice: a 3 to 5 minute video essay due Thursday September 24, 5:00 PM Pacific.

Compare two versions of the same world. Ask what survived, what was reinvented and what disappeared in the move between media. Use specific evidence.

Read the complete assignment and rubric

A useful three-line start

I notice...

It might... Another reading is...

To test my reading, I would look at...

Build and test an argument

Next session

Monday September 21: use the preparation guide and original framing exercise. The course asks for a 10-minute Critical Role sample through the existing course channel, not an entire episode.

Monday preparation and comparison studio

All sessions

PC backup: download and unzip the complete packet, then open index.html. Interactive local exercises work without streaming video. On iPhone, use the public guide or save this PDF to Files.